1. Select a Camera This is a simple shot of a camera made in Photoshop on a white background. 2. Select a Lens The image is made with a lens over the camera lens, with a diopter to change the amount of light allowed in. 3. Adjust the Lens An adjustment was made to alter the size of the white circle and make it more uniform. 4. Screen Saver The image used to be protected with a screen saver, but the hardware or software no longer supported it. 5. Select a Focal Point This image was created in a photo editing software package that required more space than the software provided. The image would be split into five sections, but only one could be displayed at a time. 6. Merge the Split Image All five sections are shown together. 7. Select a Color Fill This is a photo processed in Photoshop without a background. 8. Adjust a Hue Selecting the colors in the hue palette with black letters. 9. Clone Tool A clone tool copies pixels from the previously selected rectangle. 10. Move the Background Image A background was added by copying a part of the image in this example. 11. Adjust the Lens An adjustment was made to alter the size of the background and make it more uniform. 12. Apply a Special Effects Filter An attempt was made to give the image some affect for film. 13. Sharpen Tool A sharpening filter was applied. 14. Sharpen the Layers The sharpening effect was applied to both the layer and the background, but the background was stronger. 15. Blur the Image The blurred image was created by using the blur tool. 16. Adaptive Wide Angle Filter The "Adaptive Wide Angle Filter" automates the creation of various filter effects. The steps in the dialogue box would be the steps that a photographer would take to create the effect. 17. Pad an Image This image was created using a different software package where it was necessary to add black space between the images. The image was distorted as part of the process. 18. Add a Border This border was added by starting with the selected rectangle and painting a new layer with a black color. 19. Freeze a Layer A layer was created that would prevent editing. 20. Adjust a Hue between KeywordExtension and the WidgetExtension as prop types So in react I've come across these different aspects to Props. I have read the documentation but I still do not see the difference between KeywordExtension and WidgetExtension as prop types. const myproptype = ({mykeyword: value}) as WidgetExtension) const myproptype = ({mykeyword: value}) as KeywordExtension) I am getting the feeling I may be missing something. Will appreciate any help A: A good way to get a better understanding is to play with the different versions of the types. // A default object literal const foo = { a: 1 } as KeywordExtension // "a" is the Keyword property const foo = { a: 1, b: 2 } as WidgetExtension // "a" and "b" are the Widget properties // Explicit constructor type declarations class Bar extends React.Component { constructor(props) { super(props); this.state = { x: 1 }; } const bar = new Bar{

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop CS6?

Washington (CNN) Pressure is building on President Donald Trump as aides try to force House Republicans in the White House and the administration to back down on a payroll tax cut extension that failed to go into law in December. Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin has insisted that the White House will not accept a two-month extension, as House Republicans previously agreed to, and Mnuchin intends to meet with the President again Monday in hopes of getting an extension for longer, a senior administration official told CNN. The official says a compromise may be found if Mnuchin delivers a deal that is "absolutely as good as they want it." But the administration's current strategy to try to force a deal by default -- just ask the House GOP if they want the two-month extension -- has angered some Republicans, and appeared to anger some colleagues who thought the December bill already included the two-month extension. In private, these lawmakers are saying there is little appetite in the White House for two-month extension but little appetite for the three-month extension Mnuchin is pushing, according to congressional sources. For more than a week, the administration has warned that if Congress doesn't pass a short-term bill extending the payroll tax cut, including new tax cuts for businesses, many of the GOP's own tax cuts set to expire at the end of this year would be jeopardized. On Friday, a Senate Republican leadership aide told CNN that the "vast majority" of Senate Republicans, in both parties, agree that a three-month extension would be a good idea and that it's important to get one done before the week of Christmas. "Some day there will be a time that President Trump and I will sit down and we will have a real conversation," Mnuchin said Friday. "That day is not today." House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy told reporters in West Virginia on Friday that "the President is of course going to do what's best for him, what's best for our country. But the payroll tax is the most important thing for our country, and I think we need to get it done." But Mnuchin's strategy runs the risk of angering many House Republicans who think they already have a deal for a two-month extension, which they passed in the House in December, but that it was never brought up for a vote in the Senate. The Senate Republican Conference has until December 15 to pass a spending bill that would extend the payroll tax cut. One senior House GOP
